A hit and run accident may include a crash with another driver, killing or injuring a pedestrian or bicyclist without stopping, hitting a parked car, or crashing into anything that is private or state property. West Virginia law requires that a driver involved in an accident with injury or death must stop the car immediately at the scene, or as close to the scene as possible. The driver must return to and remain at the scene until the authorities give them permission to leave. The only exception is if a driver must leave the scene to get help for an injured victim. Violation of this law in a fatal accident is a felony, punishable by fines and/or imprisonment. What to Do If You Are in an Accident and the Other Driver Leaves the Scene

Call 911 to get medical help and to report the accident to the police. Try to give the police as much information about the other vehicle as you can: color, model, manufacturer, condition and license plate number. Take photos of your car, the accident scene and your injuries. Gather witness names and contact information if possible. Report the accident to your insurance company. Do not leave the scene and refrain from chasing the other vehicle, as this may put you in

Hit and Run Accidents: Don't Leave the Scene Beware of Identity Theft When Filing Your Taxes In Memoriam: Client Darlie Wolfe and Her "Wolfepack" From our Blog: How the Rollback of a Child Labor Law Can Put Nursing Home

Being involved in an auto accident is a stressful and frightening experience which can bring even more anxiety if the other driver leaves the scene of the accident. A hit and run accident is one where one of the involved drivers leaves the scene without identifying themselves to the police or other drivers. Hit and run accidents are very common, comprising up to 11% of U.S. crashes according to the National Highway Traffic Safety Association (NHTSA). Many times, the driver who leaves the scene has something to hide such as a criminal record, a poor driving history or is driving under the influence of alcohol or drugs. If you are involved in a hit and run accident where the other driver has left the scene: · Stay calm if possible. a hazardous situation. Beware of Identity Theft med of the innerest prograd temperature Tax Return With the close of 2018, it's time to begin planning federal, state and local tax filings.
